Opening Reception January 9, 6 – 8

With a performance by Dirty Mirrors promptly at 7:15

For my second exhibition at Sometimes (works of art), I am showing four images.

1. A line drawing of a giraffe from Freud's Sexual Enlightenment of Children. This book is a case study of a little boy named Hans who developed a phobia of horses at age 5. A follower of Freud, undertook the analysis of his own son.

I draw a giraffe for Hans....He says to me, 'You must draw his widdler.' (Hans' nan 'Draw it on yourself.' At this he adds a new line to the picture of the giraffe, which is short but then adds another line to it, remarking 'His widdler is longer than that.'

In the course of his analysis, Hans' sexual desire for his mother is uncovered along with his jealousy and aggression towards his father. With the conscious recognition of these Hans is cured of his phobia.

2. A large painting of a woman in fishnet stockings. Close inspection reveals that she's on a platform in front of a photo backdrop of a landscape.

3. A photograph of one of the palettes I used in the making of the large painting.

4. A small painting of three boys in which the brushstrokes follow a predetermined set of rules.
